A full-throated expression of support appears to contradict statements Lombardo made two days earlier, on Monday, at the Western Governors'

Association, a separate bipartisan group.

When asked if he would consider authorizing the Nevada National Guard to aid the Trump administration in mass deportations, Lombardo replied that "the devil's in the details" and that it was "too soon to opine on the nebulous or the unknown."

When asked whether he would consider authorizing the Nevada National Guard to aid President-elect Donald Trump in mass deporting millions of undocumented immigrants, Gov. Joe Lombardo said "the devil's in the details." ... Speaking during a Western Governors' Association press conference in Las Vegas Monday, Lombardo said "we have to figure out what is the better need" for the state's National Guard and "whether the mission takes priority within the state or to the federal picture or the federal windows, that's the best way we can answer."

Trump vowed mass ... have to send them all back," Trump said.

He also pledged to end birthright citizenship, which is granted by the 14th Amendment, and said he was open to separate proposals working with Dreamers.

Lombardo, along with governors of New Mexico, Colorado, Hawaii, Wyoming and Idaho, met Monday at the Western Governors Association conference in Southern Nevada to discuss policy resolutions related to workforce development, air quality, compensatory mitigation, energy and health care.

Democratic Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham of New Mexico said that every governor has to adapt to policies proposed by the administration.

Utah Gov. Spencer Cox has made plain his desire to make Utah an energy powerhouse, but how does that happen?

At the Western Governors' Association meeting Monday in Las Vegas, the organization adopted a bipartisan resolution that acknowledges the demands facing the grid, especially in light of explosive growth and environmental constraints.

"The effects of extreme weather events, the integration of clean energy resources, increasing demand ... the federal permitting process.

"Western energy production and infrastructure are indispensable to meeting to our nation's energy demand," and this energy sector is a significant contributor to the economic success of many western communities" the resolution states.

This resolution expresses western governors' priorities and initiatives for the West.

This would be devastating for Colorado, devastating for consumers who would be forced to pay 25% more for everyday products, devastating for housing and construction, because a lot of our timber comes from Canada, but also devastating for American manufacturing because these are two of our largest export markets and they would put retaliatory tariffs back on us. Western governors said they were taking a wait-and-see attitude Monday when asked about their response to President-elect Donald Trump's promises of an immigration crackdown.

Nevada Gov. Joe Lombardo said the "devil's in the details" when it comes to the state's role in Trump's plans to enact a mass deportation ... program, and whether Nevada would use its National Guard to carry out the program.

"It's too soon to opine on the nebulous or the unknown," he said during a news conference at the winter meeting of the Western Governors' Association in Las Vegas. "A lot of things I know get promised during campaigns and then the practicality of implementing those comes to bear."

On the campaign trail, Trump and his vice president, JD Vance, the "largest deportation of criminals" in U.S. history, though the logistical plans for how it will get ... accomplished are murky.

Lombardo said during a , when he was running for governor, that he would not send National Guard troops to the southern border.

New Mexico Gov. and Western Governors' Association Chair Michelle Lujan Grisham said the western governors have learned to adapt to every federal administration, and each state has different priorities.

"Our Constitution is very clear about privacy," she said. "It's very clear about what we can and cannot do, and what we believe is the federal government's responsibility and their limitations by the ...

Many believe that public lands, thought to be the shining achievement of conservation in the West, are the answer to the region's housing and climate crises. But federal red tape is a barrier to that mission.

The Western Governors' Association hosted the first day of its winter meeting on Monday in Las Vegas, with experts and governors taking a stab at the West's complex public lands issues.

The average Nevada homeowner paid $964 a year on home insurance in 2020. Today, that same homeowner would pay $1,290 for similar coverage, a 34% increase, according to an analysis from Nerdwallet.

Speakers at a meeting of the Western Governors' Association on Tuesday in Las Vegas blamed the surge, at least in part, on climate change and an associated increase in wildfires.

"The changing climate has really created one of the most challenging home insurance markets that we've experienced," Colorado Gov. Jared Polis said. "That increasing cost of ...

... and businesses. The fire ultimately destroyed two commercial buildings, 14 residences, and 22 outbuildings.

The destructive Davis Fire was a prime example of wildfires in Nevada increasing in populated areas where prime development is budding against fire-prone wilderness zones.

During the Western Governors' Association conference at the Four Seasons in Las Vegas Tuesday, Western governors said they are well aware of the home insurance crisis facing their states.

"We know that across the West changing climate has really created one of the most challenging home insurance markets that we've ever ... conditions that are leading to some of the costliest and, of course, deadliest losses in history."

The governors on the panel Tuesday agreed that the most immediate way to manage wildfires in the West is by reducing wildfire fuel through mechanical thinning of forests and prescribed fires.

The Western Governors' Association approved a bipartisan policy resolution Tuesday to tackle wildfire and related air quality issues. The policy calls for increased use of prescribed fire and encourages greater state-federal collaboration on smoke management planning and other tools to facilitate the use of prescribed fire where ...

We found Governor Polis in Las Vegas this week at a meeting of Western governors, and he offered a mixed view of the new president. We don't know exactly what the new ministration is going to do. Right. There's this huge reach. Obviously, I'm very critical of 25% tariffs with or any tariff with, especially Mexico and Canada, our two largest trading partners. This would be devastating for Colorado, devastating for consumers who would be forced to pay 25% more for everyday products, devastating for housing and construction, because a lot of our timber comes from Canada, but also devastating for American manufacturing because these are two of our largest export markets and they would put retaliatory tariffs back on us. So I'll be as outspoken as I can about the damage and harm that would be caused by a trade war. What prompted you to speak positively about Robert F Kennedy Jr when he was nominated to lead the Department of Health and Human Services? Last time Donald Trump was president, he appointed a pharmaceutical lobbyist, Alex Azar, to be head of that agency. In my opinion, that was really the fox guarding the henhouse. Whatever RFK is and isn't, he's certainly not a pharmaceutical lobbyist. So I think having.

We've been talking with one of the more interesting governors in the country right now, Jared Polis of Colorado. As President elect Trump prepares to take office, Polis joined the governor of Illinois to establish a group to fend off threats of autocracy and strengthen democracy. Many Coloradans feel under assault from a potential Trump administration, whether they're members of the LGBTQ community or whether they're immigrants. I want to make sure that people know that Colorado is a place for everybody. But Polis has done something else. He's made some statements that dismayed his fellow Democrats, such as when he spoke favorably of Robert F Kennedy Jr, a Trump nominee who questions vaccine science. We found Governor Polis in Las Vegas this week at a meeting of Western governors, and he offered a mixed view of the new president. We don't know exactly what the new ministration is going to do, right? There's this huge range. Obviously, I'm very critical of 25% tariffs with or any tariff with, especially Mexico and Canada, our two largest trading partners. This would be devastating for Colorado, devastating for consumers who would be forced to pay 25% more for.

LAS VEGAS (KTNV) — Governors from around the west — facing shortages of affordable and workforce housing — on Monday discussed hurdles and solutions to a thorny issue that affects all of their states.

At the winter meeting of the Western Governors Association held in Las Vegas, six governors from as far away as Hawai'i discussed how to provide entry-level homes to lower-income residents, asking questions of experts and sharing ideas with each other.

In Nevada, a decades-old law allows the Bureau of Land Management to sell federal land to local ... $800,000 or $1 million an acre to be our contribution to BLM lands playing a role in helping solve the affordable housing crisis that we have in this state," Raby said.

Land costs, however, are just one part of the issue, as New Mexico Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham — the incoming chairwoman of the Western Governors Association — explained at an afternoon news conference.

"How do we acquire the land?" she asked. "How do we add new, meaningful building strategies? How do we make sure they are affordable? What

Of Colorado as President elect Trump prepares to take office. Polis joined the governor of Illinois to establish a group to fend off threats of autocracy and strengthen democracy. Many Coloradans feel under assault from a potential Trump administration, whether they're members of the LGBTQ community, whether they're immigrants. I want to make sure that people know that Colorado is a place for everybody, But Polis has done something else. He's made some statements that dismayed his fellow Democrats, such as when he spoke favorably of Robert F Kennedy Jr, a Trump nominee who questions vaccine science. We found Governor Polis in Las Vegas this week at a meeting of Western governors, and he offered a mixed view of the new president. We don't know exactly what the new ministration is going to do. Right. There's this huge reach. Obviously, I'm very critical of 25% tariffs with or any tariff with, especially Mexico and Canada, our two largest trading partners. This would be devastating for Colorado, devastating for consumers who'll be forced to pay 25% more for everyday products, devastating for housing and construction, because a lot of our timber comes from Canada. But also.

Obviously the act of being on the committee is an official of act have been in Congress. There's no criminal ramifications for that. The president is being urged to pardon large numbers of people. Liz Cheney comes to mind, who was a member of that committee, Mark Milley, the retired general chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. If President Biden called you up and asked you for advice about that, what would you tell him? I know there's a lot of talk about this, but I don't understand exactly what they would be pardoned from. Do you have confidence that the criminal justice system would not produce some show trial or conviction about nothing, a political conviction? Look, I mean, there could be frivolous lawsuits. Right. And this happens, sadly in civil law. And it shouldn't happen as often in criminal law because we have a higher burden of proof, obviously, beyond a reasonable doubt. It sounds like you have confidence that the system will hold. I believe in the American justice system. Absolutely. We should always aspire to make it better and more impartial and less political. Six governors announced five bipartisan policy resolutions on air quality, compensatory mitigation, energy, healthcare and workforce development at the 2024 Winter Meeting of the Western Governors' Association Monday in Las Vegas.

The resolutions, among 29 approved on a bipartisan basis by Western Governors, serve as the foundation for leveraging their collective influence to advocate for Western priorities in Washington D.C. These include:

Colorado Gov. Jared Polis speaks during a Western Governors Association conference in Las Vegas on Monday, Dec. 9, 2024. "For those of us who live in the West, we have a lot of federal land in and around where we live," Polis said. "That's particularly true in the High Country of Colorado. In fact, there's very limited private land for development."
Robert Tann/Vail ... housing for the survivors, Green said the infrastructure is now in place to build permanent, longer-term housing sometime in the future.

Colorado's legislature has taken steps to spur development on state-owned land, allocating $13 million last year to incentivize such efforts.

The group of Western governors is set to meet later this month in Utah and then again in January in Oregon to discuss affordable housing efforts as part of New Mexico Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham's Building Resilient and Affordable New Developments in the West initiative.

Lujan Grisham said a focus on how to utilize public ...

... are expressing frustration with the industry, saying companies need to do more to bring down costs.

Some are demanding more transparency on pricing decisions. Others are calling for a complete overhaul of the system. What that looks like in each state may differ, but during the second day of the Western Governors' Association's winter meeting in Las Vegas on Tuesday, leaders agreed that something needs to change.

"Homeowners' insurance rates have skyrocketed over the last few years not just in Colorado, but across the West," Colorado Gov. Jared Polis said in an interview following a panel discussion.

... review process has been weaponized by environmental groups, who challenge infrastructure projects in court by claiming agencies were not thorough enough in their analysis.

That includes Utah Gov. Spencer Cox, who has long held grievances against permitting processes outlined in NEPA. Speaking at a Western Governors Association event on Monday, Cox said litigation can delay infrastructure projects by years.

"My background is in telecom," said Cox, whose family founded the Utah-based telecommunications company CentraCom. "I worked a lot with permitting in telecom, and we would sometimes build our routes 20 miles or more ...

... and businesses. The fire ultimately destroyed two commercial buildings, 14 residences, and 22 outbuildings.

The destructive Davis Fire was a prime example of wildfires in Nevada increasing in populated areas where prime development is budding against fire-prone wilderness zones.

During the Western Governors' Association conference at the Four Seasons in Las Vegas Tuesday, Western governors said they are well aware of the home insurance crisis facing their states.

"We know that across the West changing climate has really created one of the most challenging home insurance markets that we've ever ... these conditions that are leading to some of the costliest and, of course, deadliest losses in history."

Governors on the panel Tuesday agreed that the most immediate way to manage wildfires in the West is by reducing wildfire fuel through mechanical thinning of forests and prescribed fires.

The Western Governors' Association approved a bipartisan policy resolution Tuesday to tackle wildfire and related air quality issues. The policy calls for increased use of prescribed fire and encourages greater state-federal collaboration on smoke management planning and other tools to facilitate the use of prescribed fire where ...

The average Nevada homeowner paid $964 a year on home insurance in 2020. Today, that same homeowner would pay $1,290 for similar coverage, a 34% increase, according to an analysis from Nerdwallet.

Speakers at a meeting of the Western Governors' Association on Tuesday in Las Vegas blamed the surge, at least in part, on climate change and an associated increase in wildfires.

"The changing climate has really created one of the most challenging home insurance markets that we've experienced," Colorado Gov. Jared Polis said. "That increasing cost of ...
