... tension with the United States, Canada has a rudderless government.

The premier of Alberta — the provincial economy being heavily dependent on oil-and-gas exports to the United States — has been on a hearts-and-minds tour of the United States in recent weeks. In December, Smith attended the Western Governors' Association, boosting Alberta's profile as a major exporter to the U.S. energy industry and explaining that tariffs on Alberta oil will make energy and gasoline more expensive for Americans.

Smith has also appeared on Fox News regularly and is planning to attend Trump's inauguration ceremony on Jan. 20. Along ...

Gov. Tina Kotek stumped for one of her signature issues on Wednesday before an audience of housing leaders from across the West as she readies for a similar push in the Oregon statehouse.

Speaking before a meeting of the Western Governors' Association held this week in Bend, Kotek pressed attendees from New Mexico to California to Colorado to embrace "middle housing" — duplexes, triplexes and other options between single-family houses and apartment buildings.

States across the West are grappling with housing shortages and escalating costs of ...

Zoom out: Kotek said the state had finalized four outstanding project reviews with federal agencies in the waning weeks of Biden's term, specifically for siting of solar arrays, protecting sage grouse territory and other wildlife protections.

"This isn't just an Oregon thing. Western governors, Western states want to have more flexibility and more ability to partner to do things that have more appropriate local impacts," Kotek told the Capital Chronicle.

The bottom line: If all else fails, Huntington said, the state would not take lawsuits "off the table."

Increases in construction costs, rapidly growing catastrophe exposure, and a challenging reinsurance market as reasons for pulling out of the state. Then came farmers, which announced it too would stop writing new policies in California, citing the exact same reasons as State Farm. By 2024. Five other companies Am Gard, Falls Lake, the Hartford, Tokio Marine Insurance Company, and American National also stopped writing new home insurance policies in California. All told, these companies represented 35% of California's home insurance market, so that mass evacuation of insurance companies is not just happening in California. Just last month, at the annual Western Governors Association conference, lawmakers from Nevada, Colorado and in other states called the rapid exit of insurance companies from their regions, quote, the most challenging home insurance market we've ever experienced.

Just last month, at the annual Western Governors Association conference, lawmakers from Nevada, Colorado and other states called the rapid exit of insurance companies from their regions, quote, the most challenging home insurance market we've ever experienced, end quote. So today, we're going to take a close look at America's fragile home insurance system. Is there a better, more affordable, and sustainable way to keep homeowners insured? And we're going to start with Carmen Balbir. She's the executive director and, uh, of Consumer Watchdog, a nonprofit dedicated to protecting consumer and taxpayer interests. And she joins us from Los.

Green has said he will not support any of Trump's anti-immigrant policies by sending Hawaii National Guard troops to the mainland to deport immigrants if it means separating families.

Neither will some Republican governors, said Green, who recently attended the Western Governors' Association winter meeting, which includes Republican and Democratic governors.

He and state Attorney General Anne Lopez in 2024 were already working with coalitions of governors and attorneys general from blue states to prepare to push back on any Trump policies they disagree with.

Republican Gov. Joe Lombardo has called on the federal government to release more land to address the housing crisis. Last year, Lombardo sent several letters to President Joe Biden criticizing the White House for not making more federal land available to build more housing.

At the Western Governors Association meeting in December, Lombardo again emphasized the need for more federal land to build housing.

A group of Republican and Democratic governors mostly from the Western United States came together late last year about a month after the election of Donald Trump to announce 23 bipartisan policy goals for 2025. Three of those resolutions from the Western Governors Association focused on energy, air quality and workforce issues.

"The fun thing about WGA is that our entire purpose is to foster bipartisan policy development with a federal focus," said Troy Timmons, policy director of the WGA, made up of 22 governors of the westernmost United States and territories and ... "You know, here's where we're coming from and where [our interests] match up, because we're pushing [that message] on the hill."

Additionally, Timmons stresses how vital bipartisanship will be during the upcoming Trump Administration and Republican majority in Congress.

"Here's a blueprint from Western governors on things that they've been able to build bipartisan consensus on," said Timmons, "doesn't it make sense to use this as a starting point as you put whatever together."

How these resolutions benefit the private sector IRL

One of the facets of WGA's Energy Policy Resolution includes a push for ...

"Anything we can do to reduce time and cost associated with being able to drill for the purposes of geothermal energy is something that we're very excited about," Colorado Governor Jared Polis and then current chair of WGA told Stateline in March 2023, "There's been great interest from other governors in the West."

And while waiting on the federal government, Gov. Polis and WGA then introduced the Heat Beneath Our Feet initiative to examine potential future land for geothermal development, while Colorado announced tax credits to incentivize private sector development of geothermal energy.

In April last ...

By Adam Aton Western governors of both parties are greeting the incoming second Trump administration with calls for "all of the above" energy development, even as they urged national Republicans to preserve some of the Biden administration's energy policies. Democratic and Republican members of the ... more prescribed burns - and sustained investment in the electricity grid.

Noting that the West holds the majority of the country's oil, the WGA's energy resolution calls for a "balanced" energy portfolio that also includes government support for domestic mining and geothermal development. The Western governors expressed support for some climate policies begun by President Joe Biden, such as hydrogen hubs. The Biden administration has directed $7 billion under the bipartisan infrastructure law to seven hydrogen hubs, including four in states covered by the WGA. "Western Governors are ... Security and Interior departments, respectively. The group also includes some of the Democratic Party's top figures, such as California Gov. Gavin Newsom, Colorado Gov. Jared Polis and New Mexico Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham, who currently chairs the group. The group acts as a policy forum for Western governors. It also offers them a platform to lobby Washington, as the WGA did earlier this year when it called for the Senate to pass an outdoor recreation package. Along with energy policy, the WGA approved four more policy resolutions, including one on compensatory mitigation . The ...

Oregon Governor Tina Kotek is in Bend, one of her few visits since being elected in 2022.

Kotek is hosting a Western Governors' Association workshop on building affordable housing.

Kotek says hosting the western governors in Bend is an opportunity to showcase the many ways state and local officials are cutting red tape that encourages construction of affordable homes for people of all income levels.

"It is truly a pleasure to hang out with other governors from the west and talk about issues that affect all of our ... said.

The governor joined workshop attendees for a tour of three affordable housing projects in Bend--Crescita by RootedHomes, Woodhaven Estates by Thistle & Nest and NW Cottages by Habitat for Humanity--that showcase creative approaches to attainable homeownership and sustainable design.

The Western Governors' Association conference continues Thursday with discussions on improving access to affordable housing, planning and development challenges, and scaling modular housing solutions.

... in particular, challenging.

Still, with advocates for the release of more federal land for housing positioned in the White House, Carson City and Congress, the time is ripe.

"The key to this is for us, as governors, to be able to plan," Lombardo told fellow governors during a housing panel at the Western Governors Association meeting in Las Vegas on Dec. 9. "In the current situation we're put in, we don't have the ability to do that. It's hard for us to bring solutions if we can't plan for it."

While many of the state's Democrats are taking a wait-and-see approach on Trump's tactics, they believe it's a possible area ...
